

SAFETY AND THE BUILT ENVIRONMENT: Helping Behavioral Healthcare Organizations Stay Up to the Minute

A COMPACT DISC (CD) TRAINING

Maintaining a safe physical environment for patients and staff is critically important for clinical and administrative leaders in behavioral healthcare organizations. It is also an area that is receiving increasing regulatory oversight. For example, The Joint Commission now includes an environment of care surveyor on all hospital surveys. The American Institute of Architects (AIA) is currently revising the chapter specific to psychiatric hospitals in its Guidelines for Design and Construction of Health Care Facilities. The very popular Design Guide for the Built Environment of Behavioral Health Facilities (available at www.naphs.org) is also being revised and expanded.

To help leaders in psychiatric and addiction treatment settings think through the best strategies for reviewing, maintaining, and enhancing the safety of their facilities, the National Association of Psychiatric Health Systems (NAPHS) has organized a special two-hour training on compact disc. The co-author of the Design Guide leads a panel of faculty members in a discussion designed to help listeners make solid decisions and avoid costly mistakes when implementing changes in the physical environment of care. Find out about resources that can help you locate products that others have found useful in improving patient safety. Faculty from The Joint Commission provide information about the results of their current accreditation reviews of the built environment and discuss the latest Joint Commission policies.
